ON THE COMPARATIVE VALUE OF MANGEL WURZEL AND SWEDE TURNIPS.

At the annual meeting of the Cuckfield and Weald of Sussex Agricultural Association on the 7th Oct., this subject was brought very prominently forward by the several speakers.

Mr. BLAKER congratulated Mr. Bigg on the handsome roots of mangel wurzel which he had brought to the Show. Hew had himself had some experience in growing mangel wurzel and Swede turnips; and he gave the preference to the Swedes as long as they remained good, but when they got into the months of April and May, mangel was decidedly superior, Swedes losing their virtue in the spring. Notwithstanding the opinion of Earl Spencer with regard to the fattening qualities of mangel, he preferred Swedes. He would also just mention that he thought it a good plan, in sowing mangel, to mix a little Swede with it. He did so last year, when he lost his mangel, but had a good crop of Swedes.

The CHAIRMAN was exceedingly obliged to Mr. Blaker for his information. That was precisely the sort of thing they wanted at these meetings.

Mr. E. S. BIGG — Perhaps Mr. Blaker will tell us whether he grew the common mangel, the orange globe, or the sugar beet? The sugar beet produces the greatest quantity of saccharine matter, which is the fattening principle; the orange globe the next; and the field beet the least of all.

Mr. BLAKER replied, that he had tried the field beet, which he believed was the worst sort⁵. He had tried to get a crop of orange globe; but, as he said just now, his seed failed.

Mr. BIGG — In the neighbourhood⁶ of London they grow the common field beet in large quantities for use in the dairies; and they find it a great producer of milk.

Mr. BLAKER — Just so; and I think that is the principal use of it.

Mr. BIGG — That is the common field beet. The other sorts are excellent for fattening; at least, that is the opinion of gentlemen who have studied the subject and made it a matter of chemical analysis.
